ContainerRound-the-Clock Purple and Gold Lawrence Freeney on jumping back into the slot after two years on defense April 21, 2011 | 8:25 am When Lawrence Freeney came into the NFL, he was known as a defensive end. But for the Chargers, he was known as a pass rusher.

Now, with new Chargers defensive coordinator John Pagano on the job for the first time in 2012, Freeney's role is to regain his old form after developing into a solid reserve two seasons ago. "I've kind of jumped back into the slot a little bit," Freeney said Thursday. "I've been playing the end for the last two years, and I think that's the best position for me. With what's going on, I just have to get back into my positions." Freeney said he has a better feel for where Pagano wants him to stand on the field and on the depth chart. "Obviously the system's pretty new so I've been kind of wandering a little bit," Freeney said. "But now that I have the depth chart, I've been able to really study that and I have some idea of where I'm going." Freeney was more than happy to find out Pagano had officially taken over as the new defensive coordinator. Pagano was Freeney's position coach with the Chiefs the past two seasons. "It's kind of been a day of firsts," said Freeney. "So to be able to meet this guy in person, and the first time we got to talk, it was right after, and it was just neat to be able to meet him and see him, and talk about what we're going to do this year, and he came out and talked about things that he's seeing in the film. It's been real good." With Chris Horton back as the defensive line coach, and Pagano replacing Gregg Williams as the new defensive coordinator, Freeney said he's hoping
